Thank you for the best issue I have ever seen (September 2002). You have captured the heart and spirit and hopes and dreams and historical roots and decades of fruits that characterize Wake Forest College and University.

Having taught archaeology at the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, I was offered a position as associate professor of religion at WFC in the summer of 1946, and my years there were delightful. It meant, though, that I would not be moving to Winston-Salem because I was asked to be the professor of archaeology and Ancient Near Eastern Studies in the new seminary before going to Stetson University in Florida, where I retired after 22 years. You have done me a great favor by publishing this issue.

Marc H. Lovelace
Winston-Salem, N.C.

Your September 2002 issue is the best one of all. Why? Because of the article on “Corapeake.” I suppose Brenda Parker Hunt and I are the only two in Wake Forest history whose roots were solidly established in or near that tiny town.

Thanks for calling it a town. During my youth I could stand in our front yard, look north, and, but for a curve in the road and a thicket, the whole town was visible. Sara (’53) and I plan to be on campus for the ’52 law class reunion. We shall thumb a ride to the Hanes Gallery and view Kendall Messick’s photography of my hometown.

Wake Forest Magazine plans a tribute to retiring Chaplain Ed Christman (’50, JD ’53). If you have a memory or brief anecdote to share, please write to Cherin C. Poovey, P.O. Box 7205, Winston-Salem, N.C., 27109, or e-mail poovey@wfu.edu.
Ettin, Harriger honored

Waddill awards also presented at Convocation.

Professor of English Andrew V. Ettin and Professor of Political Science Katy Harriger were among those honored during the University’s Opening Convocation in October. Genomics pioneer J. Craig Venter, a leader in the race to decode the human genome, was the keynote speaker during the program, which kicked off the School of Medicine’s Centennial Celebration.

Ettin, who joined the faculty in 1977, received the Donald O. Schoonmaker Award for Community Service. He has participated in social and religious activities as a board member of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, as the spiritual leader of Temple Israel in Salisbury, N.C., as the acting rabbi at Temple Emmanuel in Winston-Salem, and as the Jewish chaplain at the Blumenthal Home for the Aged.

Harriger, who joined the faculty in 1985, received the Jon Reinhardt Award for Excellence in Teaching. The former students who nominated Harriger praised her for spending a great deal of time advising and working with students, especially on their writing.

The Marcellus Waddill Excellence in Teaching Awards were also presented. Jackie Rogers (’98), who received the award on the elementary level, is a fifth grade teacher at P.S. 38 in East Harlem, N.Y.

Jonathan Milner (’90), the secondary winner, teaches A.P. politics and European history at the Career Center in Winston-Salem.

Rogers and Milner were chosen from among 59 nominees for the award by a selection committee chaired by Associate Provost Sam Gladding (’67, MAEd ’71). The Waddill Award is presented annually by the Office of Alumni Activities and the education department. Each winner receives a $20,000 cash award, one of the largest monetary prizes of any teacher award program in the country.

Rogers, a native of Maryland, wanted to teach underprivileged children after she graduated from Wake Forest, so she ended up at P.S. 38, which draws most of its students from surrounding housing projects and homeless shelters. The school had been under state review for failing to meet basic standards for 12 years, longer than any other elementary school in the state, but she and other teachers succeeded in raising test scores and getting the state review lifted.

“I try to teach my class the way that I was taught,” she said, “not to dwell on the terrible circumstances surrounding my students’ lives, but to treat them as children who have minds waiting to be filled with exciting information.”

Milner taught at schools in Texas and Virginia before returning to Winston-Salem four years ago. He is the son of two educators—his father, Joe, is chairman of Wake Forest’s education department, and his mother, Lucy, teaches in the education department at Salem College. He and his students started an exchange program several years ago that has brought several students from Bosnia to the Career Center. He has gone from teaching some of the poorest students in Texas to more affluent ones in Winston-Salem, but he said both experiences have taught him the importance of communicating hope for the future to young people. “I’ve also learned that my most successful lessons are student-centered, dominated by student discussion and interaction and questions.”

The Waddill Award was established in 1994 by David Waddill of Rye, N.Y., to honor his father, Professor Emeritus of Mathematics Marcellus Waddill. The deadline for the 2003 awards is Dec. 16. For information, visit www.wfu.edu/alumni/events/waddill.
End of an era
Chaplain Ed Christman will retire in July.

Ed Christman, the University’s spiritual leader for more than three decades, will retire as chaplain next summer. Christman, 72, counseled generations of students, faculty, staff and alumni and became synonymous with University events such as Thursday morning worship in Davis Chapel, the annual Christmas Love Feast in Wait Chapel and the annual pre-school retreat at Camp Hanes.

“Ed Christman is one of the Wake Forest ‘institutions’ whose tenure and influence have made him one of the most visible and beloved figures in our modern history,” said President Thomas K. Hearn Jr. “Whether working with individual students or leading our public liturgical observances, Ed has influenced generations of Wake Foresters.”

Christman (’50, JD ’53) was a talented debater as an undergraduate on the old campus. A “clear call to ministry” during his last months in law school led him to the new Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary, which had opened on the old campus in anticipation of the college’s move to Winston-Salem. He also began working part time as director of the Baptist Student Union. After Wake Forest moved to Winston-Salem in 1956, he served as director of the Baptist Student Union under J. Glenn Blackburn and as assistant chaplain under L.H. Hollingsworth. He continued to work with the BSU but also became known for reaching out to students of other faiths. In 1963, he secured office space in the library for part-time chaplains from the Methodist, Presbyterian and Episcopalian churches. He became chaplain in 1969.

The University’s commitment to preparing students who are not only strong intellectually but also spiritually aware is the primary reason he has committed more than five decades of his life to Wake Forest, he said. “It’s been the quality of character and intellect of the students that I have enjoyed the most. That has been God’s grace. It is a divine gift, as is the whole university.”

Christman said he plans to spend the next few months going through his papers and memorabilia and donating some items to the University’s archives. “I assume there is a period of adjustment one goes through in which you have to disengage, but I plan to stay in touch with the friends I have made here,” he said. “I’ll be around.”

Stepping down
Babcock Dean Charles Moyer will return to teaching.

Babcock School Dean R. Charles Moyer will step down next August after five years as dean to return to full-time teaching and writing at the school. Moyer, who is also GMAC Chair in Finance, joined the faculty in 1988 and was named dean in 1997.

Moyer said business schools need to be re-energized with new leadership every five to eight years. “The Babcock School is well positioned for a period of substantial future progress,” he said. “During the next five years, I see our greatest challenge and opportunity being recruiting a cadre of high profile teacher-scholars across all of our disciplines to provide increased national and international visibility and additional research leadership to complement and build upon the considerable talents of our current faculty.”

The Babcock School has been ranked among the top business schools in each of the five major business school rankings—The Wall Street Journal, Forbes, Business Week, The Financial Times and U.S. News and World Report. Most recently, the school was described as a “hidden gem” and ranked 23rd among the world’s top 50 business schools by the Wall Street Journal. The Journal’s survey of corporate recruiters also ranked Babcock’s Career Management Center fifth in the country and sixth in the world. The Angell Center for Entrepreneurship was ranked 22nd by Success magazine.

During Moyer’s tenure, the full-time faculty has grown from 26 to 40 professors. A new 17-month Fast-track Executive MBA program started in 2001, and a new two-year Evening MBA program started in 2001. The school has started three new international study programs and developed partnerships with schools in Vienna, Austria; Moscow, Russia; Lyon, France; and Stuttgart and Koblenz, Germany.

Moyer came to Wake Forest in 1988 after serving on the faculty at Texas Tech University, the University of New Mexico, Lehigh University and the University of Houston. He has co-authored three books and written articles for numerous professional journals. A search committee for a new dean is being chaired by Ken Middaugh, the Babcock School’s associate dean for management education.
ACC Champs!
Field hockey makes history; men's soccer soars

The Wake Forest field hockey team made history on Nov. 10, shutting out Maryland, 4-0, in the finals of the 2002 ACC Championship. With the win over the four-time defending ACC champs, the Deacons (16-2) brought home the first ACC Championship trophy in team history.

Four Demon Deacons were named to the ACC All-Tournament team. All-ACC sophomore Kelly Dostal was named tournament MVP, recording two goals and two assists in the tournament. ACC Player of the Year Kelly Doton also made the squad, along with senior Heather Aughinbaugh (two goals, two assists) and junior goalkeeper Katie Ridd.

Wake Forest Head Coach and ACC Coach of the Year Jennifer Averill was proud of her squad. “We’ve had this mission in the back of our heads for a long time,” she said. “Our motto for the season has been to act like champions whenever we step onto the field, and we definitely did that today.”

The Championship for the Deacons is not only the first in team history, but it also ended Maryland’s streak of four straight ACC Championships. It is also the first time a team other than Maryland or North Carolina has won the championship. The Deacons began play in the 2002 NCAA Division I Championship on Nov. 16.

Women’s soccer

The Wake Forest women’s soccer team had three players honored at the 2002 ACC Women’s Soccer Banquet. A. B. Robbins and Katherine Winstead received second-team All-ACC honors, while Sarah Kozey was named to the All-Freshman squad.

Men’s soccer

In front of a capacity crowd on Senior Night (Nov. 8) at Spry Stadium, seniors Bobby Gehring and Brad McEachern turned in memorable performances as the top-ranked Wake Forest men’s soccer team defeated visiting Georgia Southern, 8-0. The Demon Deacons finished the regular season as the only undefeated squad in the country with a record of 14-0-4.

Gehring, a native of Amsterdam, posted his first Wake Forest hat trick, scoring in the 22nd, 49th and 70th minutes of the game. McEachern, the goalkeeper from Arcadia, Calif., posted the first solo shutout of his career, making four saves and assisting on the team’s final goal of the night.

Wake Forest went undefeated on the regular season and earned the number one seed in the ACC Tournament.
Fond farewell

Hallie Arrington’s life may be changing, but her love for Wake Forest will stay the same.

Among the many devoted progeny of Dear Old Wake Forest, none is a more loving daughter—literally as well as figuratively—than Hallie Arrington (’76, MAEd ’88). The great-great-granddaughter of Wake Forest founder Samuel Wait, she grew up on the Old Campus in Wake Forest, N.C., where her ancestors and family have lived since the institution’s very beginning more than 165 years ago. Then, as a college freshman, she moved to the new campus, where she has remained, except for one brief interruption, for 30 years–25 as a staff member in the registrar’s office. For almost a quarter of a century, no Wake Forest undergraduate has received a diploma without her certification of degree completion.

Now, Arrington is returning to old Wake Forest. She has resigned effective this month, as senior associate registrar and registrar of the divinity school, to get married. Arrington and her new husband, who works in the area, will live with her mother, at least temporarily, in her childhood home. It’s all a somewhat unexpected turn of events that have engendered mixed but mostly joyful feelings. “How can you be at a place you love for so long and not miss it?” she said.

Arrington grew up as the only child of parents who were themselves only children. Her father taught applied math at old Wake Forest, but when the campus relocated to Winston-Salem in 1956, he decided to remain in Wake Forest and went into the contracting business. With roots as deep as Hallie’s, though, there was no question where she would go to college.

After graduation and a brief stint as an apartment-leasing agent in Winston-Salem, Arrington returned in June 1977 to the registrar’s office, where she had worked during registrations as a student assistant in the religion department. She started out evaluating the credits of transfer students, then was put in charge of graduation and degree-requirement certification.

At the time, the registrar’s office had the only administrative computer on campus, including an old card-batch registration system that had been programmed in-house. She attributes that and many other innovations in the office over the years to her longtime boss and mentor, Margaret Perry, who served 50 years in the office, the last 25 as registrar. “Mrs. Perry has a remarkable mind,” Arrington says. “Most of the women of her era were not into technology and change, but she always wanted the latest technological advancements. She was a wonderful role model.”

Arrington’s crunch time each year was the week leading up to Commencement, when she had to certify that each graduating senior had fulfilled his or her degree requirements. The window was small: just a few days between the Tuesday by which professors had to turn in their spring-semester grades and Friday, when the Commencement program went to press. “When I came here, the annual degree audit was done manually,” she points out. “Now it’s all done online, which is a lot faster. We’ve been fortunate in having good support from the faculty as well.

“Our on-line systems have been a benefit in many ways, but I was concerned when they were implemented that it might reduce or eliminate our contact with students,” she adds. “Fortunately, students still come in and ask me questions, which I enjoy because I love the interaction with them.”

Arrington, of course, bleeds black and gold. Her favorite sport is men’s golf.

“I was in college with so many of the Wake Forest greats—Curtis Strange, Jay Haas, Scott Hoch—and I remember some of the younger ones, like Billy Andrade and Len Mattiace, with great fondness,” she says. “Even though I can’t play at all, I enjoy watching them and remembering what fine men they are off the course as well as on.”

That’s the bottom line, in Arrington’s view: the extraneous things at Wake Forest may have changed, but the essentials have remained constant. “There are still good people, the students are still smart, and there’s still no parking,” she says, laughing.
Curious Connections

Scholar Evie Shockley finds that Victorian and African-American literature have a lot in common.

If one were to think of a pair of literary periods with essentially similar themes and styles, the British Victorian and 20th century African-American would not spring instantly to the minds of most readers. One might be even less likely to surmise that the two would comprise the specialty of one scholar.

But in their use of Gothic horror conventions as metaphors for violation, evil and innocence lost, British Victorian and African-American novels have a lot in common. And in Evie Shockley, Wake Forest has a recent faculty addition who draws the connections.

Shockley, in her second year at the University as an assistant professor of English, adores the novels of both traditions. “There are lots of correspondences between Victorian and contemporary African-American literature,” she explains. “Both picked up on the Gothic conventions and imagery that emerged in the late 1700s—ghosts, haunted houses, evil doubles, young virginal heroines victimized by older men who proved to be their fathers, etcetera. Gothic images of horror suggested the writers’ terror over how their identities—their race, class, gender, sexuality and nationality—were formed and reformed from moment to moment in relation to the norms of domestic ideology. Writers from these traditions were haunted by such instability.”

In her dissertation for her doctoral degree at Duke, Shockley analyzed the imagery and corresponding thematic implications of a number of pairs of books by Victorian and modern African-American writers. In “Bleak House” by Charles Dickens and “Paradise” by Toni Morrison, for example, the haunted house is the central metaphor. “In domestic ideology, the home is said to be a safe place,” says Shockley, a native of Nashville who earned bachelor’s and law degrees from Northwestern University and the University of Michigan, respectively, before pursuing her Ph.D. in English. “In these novels, the houses are haunted by dangers that have invaded them. Ideologically speaking, the home is the place that separates ‘us’ from ‘them’; the gothic metaphors register the frightening recognition that this supposedly safe refuge is not impervious.”

The doppelganger, or double, is the overarching image in the highly autobiographical novels “Villette,” by Charlotte Brontë, and “Lucy,” by Jamaica Kincaid. (Kincaid, in fact, uses the same names for the main characters in her book that Brontë used in hers, making “Lucy” a sort of double of “Villette.”) In “The Woman in White” by Victorian novelist Wilkie Collins and the seminal 1950s work “Invisible Man” by African-American writer Ralph Ellison, the ghost is the spectral presence.

Despite being drawn to literature and writing from the time she was very young, Shockley chose to study law after college. “There are certain similarities between the study of law and the study of literature, particularly the importance of defining one’s terms precisely, and the difficulty of doing so given the different ways a phrase can be interpreted,” she says. “To recognize the multiplicity of meanings in a phrase and work with those possibilities on behalf of your client is a large part of the lawyer’s job.”

After clerking with the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit, Shockley went to work for the environmental law department of a large firm in Chicago. “Fairly quickly, I sensed that it was not an area in which I could make my career,” she says. After four years, she quit the firm and followed her heart back to English.

She is a poet as well as scholar. Her chapbook “The Gorgon Goddess” is a compilation of passionate poems about the African-American female experience. “The title imagines African-American women at the intersection of divinity and demonization, and the poems explore various historical factors that have shaped our experience,” she says of her work.

Shockley was one of two young African-American scholars to join the English faculty last year (Michael Hill, who holds a Ph.D. from Harvard, was the other). “I like the fact that it’s a place that supports research without losing its liberal arts focus,” she says of Wake Forest. “And I like the people very much.”
Optimistic conclusions

Economics professor Sylvain Boko sees hope for Africa.

From a distance, Africa looms dark and chaotic, rife with poverty, disease and brutality. It can be easy to despair of a brighter future for the continent. But for one Wake Forest professor and his students who've seen it up close, a different impression emerges. They see a waning of the tribal conflicts and civil wars that have ravaged so many of Africa's countries for so long; a rising trend of political self-determination for communities; an emerging emphasis on education, health and economic development; a base of independent and resourceful citizens with entrepreneurial spirit. They see, in a word, hope.

In his newly published book, "Decentralization and Reform in Africa," Assistant Professor of Economics Sylvain H. Boko looks at trends in four African countries—Benin, Mali, Burkina Faso and Ghana—and comes to some optimistic conclusions. By allowing local communities to elect their own leaders and seek their own funding, he observes, the central governments of those countries are fostering conditions for economic development. The trend, he notes, continues a movement toward democratization in the nations that began in the early 1990s.

Boko sees positive signs in other, more troubled countries as well. In Angola, the death of their leader has encouraged rebels to lay down their arms. In the Congo, four neighboring countries that had been fighting for hegemony have agreed to withdraw their troops.

The status of women—one of Boko's prime concerns—is appallingly low in virtually every country. Despite democratic reforms, Nigeria, the continent's most populous country, remains ravaged by ethnic and tribal conflicts. Zimbabwe continues to spiral downward into poverty and chaos under the brutal regime of Robert Mugabe. But to Boko, these are exceptions rather than the rule. "The conflicts that have afflicted Africa are finally dying out," he says. "There is real hope that a new crop of leaders will arise and resolve to devote the resources available to the continent to education, health and infrastructure."

Boko knows firsthand of what he writes. A native of Benin, he is a specialist in international development and based his book on fieldwork rather than just theory. Each summer for the past five years, he has taken a group of 10 to 12 Wake Forest students to Africa, where they hear from local experts on economic development issues and go on field trips to observe conditions for themselves. The field trips have had a humanitarian outcome as well. "The people of Africa are poor, but they want to share everything they have with visitors," says Boko. "This can be an inspiration to young Americans. Our motto here at Wake Forest is 'Pro Humanitate,' and the field trips have helped our students become conscious of ways they can help." The students who went on last year's trip were so inspired that, when they returned to Wake Forest, they raised more than $5,000 for medicine and bedding for the local hospital in Pobe, Benin, where Boko was born.

Boko, 34, came to the United States to attend Grinnell College in Iowa, and he went on to earn his Ph.D. from Iowa State University. He joined Wake Forest's economics faculty in 1997. He and his wife, Tandeka, who is trained as a physician, have three children.
On the right course

Gordon McCray's career path has brought him back to Wake Forest.

As a teenager in DeLand, Fla., Gordon E. McCray ('85) was a competitive skateboarder. All the hours he spent making constant course corrections on his board prepared him well, it seems, for the many turns his career in business and education would take.

A physics major at Wake Forest, McCray shifted directions in his first job to industrial engineering, then zigzagged to an MBA degree and a doctorate in information systems, before doing a nifty 360 maneuver to a faculty appointment at his alma mater. Now, the BellSouth Mobility Technology Professor of Business at the Calloway School of Business and Accountancy has added a new twist to his routine: an associate deanship at the school.

McCray will focus primarily on corporate relations, curriculum development, degree program oversight and the application of technology at the school. "Gordon's commitment to the Calloway School and its students is extraordinary," said Jack Wilkerson, dean of the Calloway School. "He is an outstanding classroom instructor, a productive scholar and a thoughtful leader."

McCray's first career course correction came with his first job with Brunswick Corp., later called Memtec America. "I was working at the intersection of mechanical and chemical engineering in the design of manufacturing processes that were computer-designed and controlled," he said. "In that sort of position in that kind of environment, it seemed only natural to cross into information systems."

After he finished his MBA at Stetson University in DeLand, he moved into a management position, and then Stetson asked him to teach part-time; he found that he enjoyed teaching, so it was on to Florida State, where he completed a doctoral degree in information systems in 1994.

"The college job market tends to be feast or famine, and unfortunately, that year it was famine," he said. "There were something like 4.3 people chasing each available position." His high standards compounded his job-search challenge. "In terms of size, culture, faculty and student characteristics, and the like, I benchmarked each institution against Wake Forest," McCray continued. "I decided that in a perfect world, I'd be back at Wake."

As good fortune would have it, the Calloway School needed an information systems instructor that year, and it offered a visiting position to McCray. The following year he was offered a tenure-track position. "The stars aligned, is about all I can say," he concluded. "I was very fortunate to land in my ideal environment."

During his first year, McCray proposed a redesign of the school's information systems curriculum. "At that time, information systems in business-school curricula suffered from two maladies," he said. "First, it was often viewed, wrongly, as only partly within the purview of business. There was no real sense of how information systems can be leveraged to pursue business strategy. Second, about the only computer courses business schools were offering were 'tools' courses such as spreadsheets and word processing."

Four years later, McCray and Associate Professor of Accounting Yvonne Hinson developed an information systems degree program. Two degree options are offered: a bachelor of science in information systems, and a five-year course of study that combines the bachelor of science in information systems with a master of science in accountancy. The information systems faculty has grown to three: McCray; Denise McManus, who specializes in telecommunications and networking; and Bruce Lewis, who concentrates on e-commerce and database systems. Twenty-seven students graduated with a bachelor's degree in information systems last spring and another 10 are in the master's program.

"It's a potent combination—rare yet sought-after," McCray said. "[The degree] is still pretty new, but so far companies have responded to it very well."
Athletic center named for Manchester

Wake Forest's athletic center has been named in honor of current parents Douglas and Elizabeth Manchester of La Jolla, Calif., who recently made a $1 million gift to support the capital campaign. The Manchesters are vice chairs of the campaign and members of the Parents' Council. Two of their five children are Wake Forest students: daughter Annie is a senior with a major in communications and a minor in Spanish, and son Douglas is a sophomore leaning toward political science and communications. Doug Manchester is the founder, president and CEO of Manchester Resorts, based in San Diego.

Built in 1977, the athletic center originally contained indoor tennis courts, the Deacon Club offices and the athletic ticket office. After the most recent renovation, in 1995, the building now has offices for most of the Wake Forest coaches as well as a large weight room. The Manchester Athletic Center is "the pulse of the athletic department, where student-athletes meet with coaches and visitors and recruits are first introduced to the athletic programs," said Director of Athletics Ron Wellman.

Orr Professorship established

Friends and associates of Wake Forest Trustee L. Glenn Orr Jr. of Winston-Salem have established a professorship in his name at the Babcock Graduate School of Management. The professor hired to fill the position will lead the Babcock School's efforts within the financial services industry, where 42 percent of the School's recent graduates are employed. The effort to establish the L. Glenn Orr Jr. Professorship of Banking and Financial Services was led by trustees Victor I. Flow Jr. ('52) of Winston-Salem and Ronald E. Deal ('65) of Hickory, N.C.

Wait papers digitized

The Z. Smith Reynolds Library Special Collections and University Archives has used a $23,539 federal library grant to digitize the Samuel and Sarah Wait Collection. The collection includes journals, diaries and letters belonging to Samuel and Sarah Wait, the first baccalaureate speech given at Wake Forest, a daguerreotype of Samuel Wait and many other historical documents relating to the formation of Wake Forest and the Baptist State Convention. The collection can be viewed at http://www.wfu.edu/Library/special/wait/index.html.

Barksdale appointed

David P. Barksdale ('86), a former member of the Wake Forest Alumni Council, has been named director of the College Fund and annual support. He has spent his entire career in banking, most recently as senior vice president and business banking manager of First Citizens Bank in Winston-Salem. Barksdale replaced Paul J. Kennedy III ('82), who is now assistant athletic director for development.

Excellent accounting

For the third time in five years, accounting students in the Calloway School of Business and Accountancy rank first in the nation for their performance on the Certified Public Accountant exam last year. Three Calloway students—Wendel Kralovich, Kirk Sonnefeld and Brian Branson, all 2001 graduates—earned the three highest scores in North Carolina.

Seventy-five percent of the Calloway students taking the exam in 2001, the most recent results available, passed all four parts, more than quadruple the national average of 17.2 percent. Calloway students scored well on all four sections, ranking third in auditing, first in business law, second in financial accounting and reporting, and third in accounting and reporting.

Since the Calloway School began offering a five-year program to earn both a bachelor's and master's degree in accounting in 1997, its students' scores on the CPA exam have ranked first or second in the nation each year. While comparative data for the Class of 2002 won't be released by the National Association of State Boards of Accountancy until next year, Eric Almond ('02) achieved the third highest score in North Carolina.

Law program honored

For the second year in a row, the School of Law's Master of Law (LL.M.) in American Law program is ranked among the top 10 programs in the country, rising from eighth last year to fifth this year. The ranking was based on a survey of law professors conducted by the American Universities Admission Program. In a separate survey, conducted by the University of Texas School of Law, the law faculty ranked third in the production of books and 11th in the production of both books and articles on a per capita basis.

Research support increases

Outside support for research and related activities at Wake Forest University School of Medicine increased nearly 10 percent to a record $145.6 million in the year ending June 30. Nearly 80 percent of the total came from the federal government—primarily through the National Institutes of Health (NIH)—with the rest coming from industry, foundations and health agencies. The medical school ranked 35th in NIH support last year.

Truman Foundation honors University

Wake Forest was one of only four institutions to be recognized this year by the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation. The University received the Truman Scholarship Honor Institution Award for “active encouragement of outstanding young people to pursue careers in public service” and “sustained success in helping students win Truman Scholarships.”

Eleven Wake Forest students have been named Truman Scholars since 1977, including senior Lindsay Littlefield. Four alumni who were Truman Scholars—Megan Reif (’96), Lori Fuller (’95), Patrick Auld (’92) and Michael Riley (’81)—attended the award presentation on campus in October.

Established by Congress in 1975, the Truman Foundation provides merit-based scholarships to college juniors who wish to attend graduate school in preparation for careers in public service.

Moving up

Wake Forest advanced one place in this year’s rankings of “America’s Best Colleges,” published annually by U.S. News and World Report. Wake Forest tied for 25th with UCLA and the University of Michigan. The Calloway School of Business and Accountancy also ranked 25th.

Wake Forest was recognized for its small classes, low student/faculty ratio and freshman retention rate. The University also fared well in the alumni giving and financial resources categories. U.S. News also placed Wake Forest 31st on its list of “Great Schools at Great Prices.” The list evaluates which colleges and universities offer the best value based on a formula that relates a school’s academic quality with the net cost of attendance for a student who receives the average level of financial aid.

Chambers family gift promotes entrepreneurship

Described as “Mr. Internet” and recognized the world over as a leader in electronic technology, John Chambers, along with his wife, Elaine, and their family, recently gave Wake Forest $1 million to aid student entrepreneurial endeavors in electronic commerce and the Internet. The Chambers Family Endowment Fund for Entrepreneurship will create a kind of University-wide incubator, offering all students first-hand experience implementing their own technology initiatives.

Chambers is president and CEO of Cisco Systems. He delivered Wake Forest’s Commencement address and received an honorary doctor of laws degree from the university in 2000, the same year his daughter, Lindsay, graduated. “Wake Forest has demonstrated that it is not only important to teach people how to learn but also to expand their ideas and communications through today’s networked world,” he said. “Our goal for this fund is to provide the education, faculty support and encouragement that entrepreneurially-minded students need to put their ideas to work while they are still in school.”

Grants from the fund will be available to students on the Reynolda and Bowman Gray campuses and will be awarded as early as next spring. “This gift is an affirmation of our philosophy of putting technology in the hands of our students, then providing them with the educational underpinning, faculty guidance and other resources needed to act on their own ideas,” said President Thomas K. Hearn Jr. “The energy created in our students by this gift will spill over into our community as we continue to build the information technology and biotechnology sectors of our local economy.”
They were born during Ronald Reagan’s first term as president, as “M*A*S*H” ended its television run and “The Day After” dramatically brought the aftermath of a nuclear attack into our living rooms. Wake Forest was celebrating its Sesquicentennial and welcoming a new president.

Born in 1983 and 1984, the 1,007 freshmen in the Class of 2006, chosen from among 6,437 applicants, began their college journey in late August with high expectations of themselves and the University. They come from 41 states, including large numbers from Florida, Georgia, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Thirty percent are North Carolinians, the most since 1989. A record 14 percent are minorities, and 8 percent are children of alumni. The class is almost evenly divided between male and female.

As their college careers unfold over the next four years, Wake Forest Magazine will follow eight students. Meet them as they begin their journey.
The road that eventually led Andy Lobashevsky to Wake Forest began on top of the Empire State Building when he was 6 years old, just after he and his parents had immigrated to the United States from Moscow, Russia. “I remember looking down at all the people and cars and thinking that America is a really cool place,” he recalls. “It was scary but awesome. I remember thinking that this is where I wanted to be.”

Ten years later, he attended a high school debate tournament at Wake Forest, which eventually led him to apply for admission to the class of 2006, mostly on a whim to see if he could get in, he admits. “I remember seeing the University’s motto, Pro Humanitate, and thinking that that really jives with who I am. I like the fact that it’s not a traditional liberal arts university. It has the diversity and programs of a larger university and is nationally ranked, but it has the focus of a liberal arts school.”

Not only was he accepted, he also received a Reynolds Scholarship, the University’s most prestigious merit award. He knows that this is the place where he wants to be now. When he says that “every day was like being in a movie, with brand-new experiences and a burst of knowledge,” you’re not sure if he’s talking about his first days in America or at Wake Forest, or both. He may be the only freshman who visited his grandparents in Russia last summer and then worked at the quintessential American doughnut store, Krispy Kreme, when he returned home.

Lobashevsky’s parents were both doctors in Moscow, but their life there was still difficult, he says. After immigrating to America, they settled in Memphis, where his father had a job lined up at the University of Tennessee. They soon moved to Birmingham, where his father is a researcher with the University of Alabama transplantation unit and his mother is a researcher in infectious diseases. He wants to follow his parents into medicine, but not into research. “I love working with people. I want to help someone change their life, and what better way can you impact someone’s life than to save their life?”

He has an eclectic array of interests, from playing the piano to martial arts, and he has already discovered outlets for two new interests: He’s helped produce a Wake Forest version of a reality dating show for WAKE TV, and he’s trying for his own show on WAKE Radio. He’s taking a standard freshman course load—biology, math, psychology and a foreign language (Russian, he still speaks some), all divisional requirements—but he’s planning to apply for Open Curriculum, which would give him more freedom to pick his courses. “I’ve heard the stories about ‘Work’ Forest,” he says. “I know that to continue my performance in high school will require a lot more effort here. Time management is going to be important too, because there is so much I want to do.”

College is an opportunity to find out who I really am. I know there are aspects of my personality that I haven’t found yet that will help me grow as a person.
Kelly McManus says she’s looking forward to being more academically challenged than she was in high school. She has already been impressed with the personal attention she’s received in her four classes (her largest class is history with 25 students) and the attitude of her peers. “Here, I’m surrounded by people who are interested in learning and who want to succeed. That environment will challenge me to work harder.”

She expects her biggest challenge to be finding her place and balancing academics and extracurricular activities. In high school, she was active in Student Government and Young Life, but she plans to be more active in college. By the end of September, she had joined College Democrats, WISE (Women’s Initiative for Support and Empowerment) and Amnesty International, which she hopes will provide a platform for the issue she feels most strongly about: opposing the death penalty.

“I’m unbelievably happy to be here and excited about my classes,” she said a week into the start of the fall semester. “There hasn’t been a day when I’ve walked around campus and haven’t stopped and talked to someone I know. I like that environment. I feel like I’m at home.”
With a maturity and confidence belying his age, Reggie Mathis could probably skip college and get right into politics. He’s already been elected governor of N.C. Boys’ State (coincidentally held at Wake Forest), narrowly lost a race for national Boys’ Nation president, and met the President of the United States. But he’s got a lot he’d like to do at Wake Forest first, and he’s trying to be patient with what he foresees will be a time of “hurried expectation” the next four years. His strong faith will ultimately determine what path he takes during college and afterward, he says.

Mathis is one of a record number of minority students—14 percent—in this year’s freshman class. “I’ve met other African-Americans who have gone through Wake Forest, and I thought it would be an issue at first, but I feel blessed that everyone is treated equally,” he said. “I’d like to help change Wake Forest and bring about more multiculturalism, because education also instills learning about different cultures and people. At the same time, I want to support the Christian underpinnings of the University and what it stands for.”

The youngest of four children, Mathis credits God and his parents for his success and drive. His father has worked for a food distributor for 30 years, and his mother works at the county hospital. His sister is in law school at N.C. Central University. One brother is in the Air Force serving in Pakistan, and his other brother recently left the Marines. “I’m rooted in old-school philosophies,” he says. “I was blessed with hard-working parents and raised in the church. They’ve always impressed upon me the value of education. They have taught me to seek wisdom and be around those who are seeking wisdom.”

Mathis played football and basketball in high school, was student body president and was active in numerous clubs, in addition to being a church organist. He plans to be active in campus ministries at Wake Forest and possibly Student Government, but he is proceeding cautiously. “I was worried that I was not going to find my niche here, but God is beginning to reveal it to me,” he said. His niche may not be in an elected student office but in bringing students of all races together to talk about faith and spirituality. “When to do all the things I want to do is going to be difficult. I know I’ll have to learn to say no. At this point, I feel that I need to stress academics first.”

He is expecting that his strong beliefs will likely be challenged during the next four years, but he isn’t worried. “I’m very rooted in my Christian faith; college won’t change that. However, I am open-minded, and when it comes to understanding others’ views and opinions, I am able to learn. I think that is the biggest misconception with my faith. My faith is so strong that learning about others (faiths) doesn’t create insecurity.”
The few minutes Melissa (Missy) Malkush spent talking with Professor of Biology Pete Weigl on her campus visit were enough to convince her that she had found her college home. She wanted to come south for college and had visited several other schools when she and her parents stopped at Wake Forest. She’s wanted to be a doctor since studying colonial medical practices in fourth grade, so she dropped by the biology department to talk with someone about the pre-med curriculum.

“I was looking for a school where I would receive more (personal) attention,” she said. “When we visited here, Dr. Weigl took us into his office and starting drawing diagrams on the board of everything I could take. I felt really cared about. I didn’t have the same reaction at other places. That made up my mind.”

That feeling was reaffirmed her first week of classes when she was studying outside the Benson University Center and her Spanish professor stopped by to chat. “He’s a new professor and he wanted to know how he was doing. He said that if we don’t do well, than he feels responsible,” she said. “I want my teachers to get to know me, not just my work. They may help me learn by putting red marks on my papers and grades on my tests, but they can help me more if they work with me directly.”

Malkush has always been interested in photography and has compiled a portfolio of her work—including photographs from Ground Zero in New York—that was strong enough to land her a Presidential Scholarship, the first awarded in photography. Her father is a media technology teacher and internship coordinator at a high school, and her mother is a music teacher and orchestra leader at a junior high school. She has an older brother who recently transferred from the Merchant Marine Academy to the State University of New York at Stony Brook.

She spent last summer working in a psychology lab at SUNY–Stony Brook, excited to be using some of what she’d learned in her high school biology and chemistry classes. That experience reflected her new outlook on education: that it wasn’t about getting good grades, but about learning. One day, after she’s established her medical practice, she’d like to be able to take a month off every year to travel to South America to provide medical care to people in remote villages.

Wake Forest is smaller than she first thought, but that hasn’t curbed her enthusiasm. She’s already joined Quest, a Christian leadership group, and is volunteering at a local middle school twice a week. She’s looking forward to continuing to develop her skills as a photographer and exploring other media in the art department. And she’s one of the few freshmen in the Harbinger Corps, the student tour guides. “I see the tour groups walking around the Quad, and I want to say ‘come here’ and tell them how great it is here.”

I expect Wake Forest to prepare me for the transition from living with ‘mommy and daddy’ to being on my own. Between last month (August) and when I graduate in four years, a lot will have to happen to make that possible.
There’s no place like home, Tyler Barefoot knows, but there’s also a time to move on, and his time is now. “It’s still weird not being around my parents and brother and grandparents and cousins,” he said shortly after arriving at Wake Forest. “Everyone in the family is still pretty much right there in Dunn. We spend a lot of time together as a family. No matter how long you’re away from home, you still remember the people you left behind. But there are so many things that I want to do, and I know that I can’t do them from the confines of Dunn, North Carolina. I don’t want to limit myself.”

Barefoot, the first in his immediate family to attend a four-year college, almost ended up in a far different environment. Like many of his classmates, he wrote his freshman essay on last fall’s terrorist attacks. But he took his anger a step further and applied to the U.S. Naval Academy. When he wasn’t accepted, he turned his attention back to Wake Forest and several other schools. “I wanted to go to a smaller school and be in classes where the professors know me and care about how I do. I didn’t want to be in a place where I would see people every day and not know who they were.”

Ironically, the fact that his parents were willing to sacrifice financially to send him to Wake Forest almost sent him away. His father owns a television-repair shop and his mother is an insurance and real estate agent. “I didn’t want to put too much of a (financial) burden on them, so I probably would have gone somewhere else if I hadn’t gotten a good amount of financial aid. My parents were so supportive; they said, don’t worry about the money, we’ll find some way to get the money, but as much as they’ve done for me, I thought I needed to rely on myself more. So that made me work harder in high school so I could get financial aid.”

Barefoot spent the last two years at the N.C. School of Science and Mathematics, a public boarding high school for exceptional high school students, an experience that he says challenged him academically for the first time and helped ease the adjustment of living away from home. Outside the classroom, he was an Eagle Scout and a volunteer for church service projects and a member of the golf team. At Wake Forest this semester, he’s tutoring middle-school students through a service-learning requirement in his freshman writing seminar, but he wants to adjust to the academic workload before taking on other activities.

He admits to being a little worried about the workload and being away from home: “How am I going to do? Am I going to make it? I know I need to stop worrying, because that just stresses you out and then you won’t do well. I’m confident I’m going to be all right. I’m planning to give 110 percent.”

To flourish as an individual is as important as my education. Being the smartest man alive would be worthless without a useful purpose. My purpose is to be a good person...someone whom is a pillar of the community, someone whom people respect, and someone whom people can look up to and count on.
The opportunity to be a Demon Deacon—in the classroom and on the golf course—was too good to pass up for Sasha Suzuki. Although she had scholarship offers from several other schools, she jumped at the chance to come to Wake Forest when women’s golf coach Dianne Dailey told her that she would be welcomed on the team as a walk-on.

"Wake presented a good balance of golf and academics," she said. "One of my biggest fears (about college) is that I would get lost in a crowd and only be a number. I know that I can expect a lot of personal attention here."

Suzuki, a first-generation Japanese-American, played volleyball and softball growing up, but she didn’t take up golf until her freshman year in high school. She quickly became good enough to make her high school team—the boys’ team, because her school didn’t have a girls’ team—and won the New Jersey State Prep Girls’ Championship last May.

Her decision to come to Wake Forest was much easier than the one she had made two years ago to transfer from her public high school to a private boarding school. She was an honors student, vice president of her class, active in numerous clubs and a member of the golf and volleyball teams, but decided she needed a change. The move was beneficial, she said, because it taught her that sometimes you have to take risks and embrace new opportunities to learn and grow.

"When I look back at my college days, I know that it will be the experiences, all of the trials and tribulations, that I will remember more than anything written in a textbook, for every obstacle and every challenge I face is the opportunity for me to grow as a person."

Suzuki’s parents—her father is a computer consultant and her mother is a real estate agent—were born in Japan but came to the United States when they were young. She also has a younger sister. Her grandparents still live in Tokyo, and although she used to visit them at least once a year, she hasn’t been back in the last five years. She’s taking an independent study course this semester to hone her Japanese, so she can stay in touch with them.

Between classes, daily golf practice, and a required eight hours of study hall a week, she doesn’t have much free time. Midway through her first semester, she hadn’t qualified to play in any golf tournaments; as a walk-on, she knows the odds, but she’s hoping that she will play eventually.

"Being 600 miles away from home will take some time to get used to," she admits, "but every time I start getting a little worried or nervous, I remember I chose Wake Forest because of how wonderful it is and how much I love it."
The best thing about Wake Forest, Will Brown would probably say, is that it’s on dry land, far from the Atlantic Ocean. Having classmates and professors to interact with is pretty nice, too. After spending much of the last three years living with his parents on a sailboat in the Caribbean and taking correspondence courses to earn his high school diploma, Brown was more than ready to return to a more traditional educational setting.

“Although I loved the experience overall, I didn’t like my coursework,” he admits. “I had to teach myself everything by reading books. I couldn’t ask questions or talk to classmates; all I had was what was in the books. I’m expecting Wake Forest to provide the three-dimensional learning environment that I craved in high school.”

Brown’s parents—his dad was an investment banker, and his mom owned a specialty-food business—sold their home in Radnor, Pa., three years ago and bought a 47-foot sailboat. Since then, they’ve sailed from one port to another in the Caribbean and the West Indies, visiting the Bahamas, the Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico, Trinidad and the Virgin Islands, among other places. At the start of hurricane season each year, they docked their boat and lived for a couple of months in Florida or more recently, at their new house in Albuquerque, where Brown’s older brother attends the University of New Mexico. Brown expects to rejoin his parents on their boat during spring break.

“Sure, I missed out on regular high school stuff, but the overall experience more than made up for it,” he says. “I learned about the weather, astronomy, wildlife, fishing, geography, geology, electronics, mechanics and so many other valuable topics. I got to see so many different places and meet so many people of all different races and cultures. And I learned a lot about myself and the world in general and what’s really important.”

Brown wanted to attend college on the East Coast and, after touring several schools, chose Wake Forest for its size, resources and community atmosphere. Despite being in a regular classroom for the first time in years, Brown says he hasn’t had any problems adjusting, although he worries that his Spanish class may be difficult since he hasn’t had the opportunity to speak or hear Spanish, only read it.

“I’m pretty easygoing and adapt pretty quickly. I guess the biggest adjustment has been the late nights. I’m just not used to having so much to do.”

I know that Wake Forest will give me a chance to get the best education possible, but it is up to me to make sure that I do... and take full advantage of my professors.

I need to ask the questions that are bothering me and start a discussion about the things that interest me.
Wilber’s mother is an insurance agent in Maine, and her father is a mechanical engineer who recently moved to Raleigh. She considered half a dozen other schools before choosing Wake Forest for its “school spirit and academics. I was impressed with the close community and warm atmosphere. And it didn’t seem real competitive. So far it’s living up to my expectations,” she said in late September. “My professors are all really nice and down to earth. A lot of freshmen fear talking to them, but I’ve found them to be easy to talk to and approachable.”

Her interest in service didn’t start with AmeriCorps; in high school she volunteered with Special Olympics, Big Brothers/Big Sisters and a YMCA after-school program. At Wake Forest, she’s already joined CARE (Community Awareness through Response and Education) and Student Union, and is helping lay out news pages for the Old Gold and Black. “Community service was a big part of my life during high school and will definitely be part of my life here,” she said. “Right now, I’m trying to figure out what suits me and find my niche.”

Since she wasn’t in school last year, she knows that she may be a “bit rusty” in the classroom. But she plans to work hard to make the most of her college experience. “I expect to try a wide variety of things, to be active in community service and helping others, to forge strong relationships with peers and professors, and to recognize what my best can be and fulfill that,” she says. “The next four years will determine what kind of person I want to be, which to me is more important than the degree.”
Federal Case

Regulatory czar John Graham ('78) leads the charge in the war against bureaucratic waste and inefficiency.

By Tom Nugent

One afternoon back in late January 2001, a former Wake Forest debating champion named John D. Graham ('78) received a telephone call that would change his life dramatically. As it later turned out, the call would also have a huge impact on the way the U.S. government goes about the business of regulating everything from the air pressure in truck tires to the chemical preservatives contained in a frozen pepperoni pizza.
The phone call was from the budget director for newly inaugurated President George W. Bush, who had settled down in the White House only a few days before. After the two men exchanged pleasantries, Mitch Daniels got down to the task at hand—making the 45-year-old founder and director of the prestigious Harvard University-based Center for Risk Analysis an offer he couldn’t refuse.

“The President wants to nominate you to be the next director of ‘Oh-EYE-rah,’” said the President’s chief budget man, who also ranks as one of Bush’s closest advisers and friends. “You’ll probably come up against some opposition in the Senate during confirmation proceedings, but there’s no doubt you’ll eventually be confirmed. The job is yours, if you want it.”

Listening hard on his end of the line, John Graham felt his pulse kick up a notch. As most “inside-the-beltway” Washingtonians will quickly tell you, running “Oh-EYE-Rah” (also known as the federal Office of Information and Regulatory Affairs, or OIRA) is one of the most exciting and creatively challenging jobs in the entire executive branch of government. Under enabling legislation that was first passed during the Jimmy Carter administration, OIRA is charged with reviewing, evaluating—and in some cases rejecting—more than 600 major new regulations each year.

First activated by Ronald Reagan (his critics said he used the office to “quash” federal regulations he didn’t like), OIRA was established to provide the executive branch with an effective method for scientifically and objectively reviewing proposed agency rules and regulations. Although the OIRA director must maintain a low profile in Washington and hardly ever winds up on the “CBS Evening News with Dan Rather,” the job actually carries enormous political clout. That’s because the “regulatory czar” (as the person is informally known on Capitol Hill) has the power to shoot down new agency regulations that can ultimately affect millions of citizens and cost corporations, universities and state and local governments hundreds of millions of dollars.

As one might expect, however, there’s a high price to be paid for this kind of out-sized bureaucratic power in the fiercely competitive political arena that is Washington, D.C. What does history have to teach us about “czars”—and about how they usually end up?

As a book-devouring and endlessly energetic liberal arts undergrad during the late 1970s, Graham learned his Russian history well. But that didn’t stop him from putting his head in the noose on that January day almost two years ago. After 11 years of running one of the country’s most highly regarded high-tech cost-and-benefit analysis think tanks under the auspices of Harvard University (where he also taught in the School of Public Health), Graham understood that fate had tapped him on the shoulder and was summoning him to join the great battle against waste, inefficiency and “fuzzy thinking” in the capital city of the greatest nation on earth.

Within a few days of the White House announcement that Bush would nominate Graham for the post of OIRA director, liberal Democrats and avid environmentalists across the nation were teaming up to decry the nomination as a shameless, pro-business attempt to “gut” federal regulations that protect water and air quality, among other causes held sacred by the anti-corporate types who supported Ralph Nader in 2000.

Responding to criticism from such groups as Nader’s Public Citizen think tank, Graham insisted that OIRA’s role under his leadership would simply be to provide better analysis and assessment of proposed regulations.

Graham said at the height of the debate last summer: “There is no grandiose plot to roll back safeguards. This administration is simply pursuing an agenda of smarter regulation.” Graham also pointed to his 11-year track record at the Center for Risk Analysis, during which he had frequently come out against American corporations with recommendations that would require some American industries (such as coal-fired power plants) to spend a great deal of money protecting the public with expensive pollution-control systems.

Because he had become known as a fierce critic of “bad regulations,” however, Graham was regarded in liberal circles as a reactionary who had committed the unforgivable sin of charging federal regulators with more than 60,000 "statistical murders"—unnecessary deaths that he attributed to poorly conceived and illogical federal regulations that actually caused more harm than good. According to Graham's hard-nosed and high-tech risk-assessment studies, 2,000 to 4,000 Americans have been killed in automobiles in recent years because they were riding in cars that had been made lighter and more fragile—for no other reason than to meet new federal regulations demanding more fuel-efficient automobiles.

At his confirmation hearings in May of 2001, Graham told a panel of skeptical senators that his Harvard center was careful to avoid pro-business bias and that his analysts and data-crunchers were content to "follow the scientific data and analysis, wherever they lead us." In the end, the Committee voted 9 to 3 in his favor and he was ultimately confirmed—after a two-month halt—by a margin of 61-37.

"I can tell you one thing, for sure: The transition from being in a university setting to Washington is quite substantial," Graham said. "For me, it's been a real adjustment process—but I can't say that I was surprised by the exercise. Still, the good news is that a lot of the people who were criticizing me prior to my confirmation are now finding common areas in which we can work together on constructive solutions. After you live here for a while, you begin to realize that this is how Washington works."

Ask veteran Professor of Communication Allan Louden to explain why his former student was willing to endure the agonies of confirmation as "regulatory czar" (to say nothing of the storm and stress that goes with actually holding down the post), and the longtime director of the debate team will tell you that the new OIRA chief was one of the most driven competitors he ever coached.

"I watched John compete in the National Debate Tournament in Denver, back in March of 1978," said Louden, now in his 26th year of teaching. "He handled himself brilliantly, and even though we lost in the quarterfinals, he maintained his composure and his sense of humor. He was extraordinarily intense, but also very cool.

"To be a good debater, you have to be a fast thinker who can digest immense amounts of information, then sort through it on the spur of the moment to make your point with speed and power," Louden said. "John had a natural gift that allowed him to do those things almost effortlessly. He was also a relentlessly hard worker, often putting in 40 or 50 hours during a week to prepare for an upcoming debate. If you think about it, those are the very qualities that are required for his current job at OIRA, where he has to make quick decisions involving huge sets of data, and often while listening to conflicting opinions from the experts in the federal government. I'm not surprised that he wound up in this kind of job, and I suspect that he's enjoying the challenge fully, in spite of the stress."

As the son of a former president of U.S. Steel (Graham grew up in Pittsburgh and earned a Ph.D. at Carnegie-Mellon University after leaving Wake Forest), he says he long ago became accustomed to having other people accuse him of a pro-business bias. Yet he insists that his real motivation is public service—and that it took shape during his formative years in Winston-Salem, between high-voltage debates over economics, public policy and philosophy.

"I'm certainly not an enemy of federal regulation," he said with a soft chuckle, while relaxing with his sleeves rolled up at his office in the Old Executive Building next to the White House. "All I want is for it to be smarter. And I do believe I learned some things during my years at Harvard that will allow us to bring a new kind of keen, scientific rigor to many public issues, such as energy, transportation, health, manufacturing and so on.

"I'm convinced as never before that good public policy requires much more than good intentions. It requires a solid factual foundation. And what we find here at OMB is that many well-intentioned regulations need to be refined and improved, based upon science and engineering, in order to convert them into constructive public policy. That's what this office is all about: bringing the analytical perspective into the process of making regulations.”

How does Wake Forest fit into all that?

“Oh, that’s an easy one,” said Graham, the champion debater of 1978. “I think everybody who goes to Wake Forest gets a huge exposure to the ‘public service’ philosophy that the University lives by. And I can tell you that both my wife Susan and I are to this day still advocates of what we call ‘the spirit of Wake Forest.’ In our view, that spirit is built on two basic foundations. One is the value of a liberal arts education, and the other is the value of public service.”

Freelance writer Tom Nugent, the author of “Death At Buffalo Creek” (W.W. Norton), frequently covers stories about the federal government.

In the words of John Graham...

On why George W. Bush tapped him to be the White House’s chief “risk analyst”:

“This administration has plenty of people with political expertise. I was hired to bring a little rigor to the analysis.”

On how 9/11 has affected his new White House job:

“It will come as no surprise to your readers that in the last year or so, we have developed and approved more than 50 new [federal government] regulations that were stimulated directly by the 9/11 terrorist attacks.”

On a recent report showing that Americans spend 1.5 billion more hours complying with federal paperwork than in 1990:

“The American people are wasting more time than ever on needless red tape. We’re committed to eliminating paperwork that burdens and doesn’t benefit the public.”

On the value of a liberal arts education:

“The liberal arts background I earned at Wake Forest was marvelous preparation for this job. I go from environmental matters to civil rights to transportation policy—often on the same day. Learning a little bit about a lot of things is the key to keeping myself on track, and that’s what a liberal arts education is all about!”
The distinguished service of C. Douglas Maynard ('56, M.D. '59) has played a vital role in the University's past and in its future.

Doug Maynard speaks softly but dreams big. And his dreams have played a big role in the history of Wake Forest.

Maynard, for many years head of the Department of Radiology at the School of Medicine, is spearheading efforts to bring thousands of research jobs to Winston-Salem. While the medical school's expanded Piedmont Triad Research Park campus could be an economic catalyst for the entire region, Maynard would just as soon stay unnoticed in his small Meads Hall office and let someone else get the congratulations. "He never wants to focus on his accomplishments," said co-worker Donna Garrison. "He always wants to make sure others get credit."

A former downtown redevelopment committee.

After nearly a half-century at Wake Forest— as a student ('56, M.D. '59), professor and administrator—C. Douglas Maynard plans to retire from full-time service this month. But he was not exactly winding down during his final few months on the job. Maynard was in the thick of three major Wake Forest projects, including the research park expansion, perhaps the biggest undertaking in the medical school's history.

The Piedmont Triad Research Park now consists of four buildings, 20 tenants and about 600 employees in a five-block area near First and Main streets in downtown Winston-Salem. But supporters envision a park growing to more than 10 times its current size, employing 10,000 highly skilled workers and pumping more than $2.5 billion into the region's economy. The plan, if successful, would transform a part of town mainly occupied by rundown tobacco buildings into a thriving nerve center. School of Medicine officials already have agreed that the school will be the expanded park's anchor tenant. The school will move its research department to the park; the Department of Physiology and Pharmacology and the Physician Assistant Program already are located there.

Park supporters believe the School of Medicine's presence will draw biotechnology companies eager to work with University scientists. If the park expansion goes as planned, those companies will bring thousands of high-paying jobs to Winston-Salem in the next 10 to 15 years. But Maynard said the park's impact would be even greater. It will promote Winston-Salem as a research center, he said, and will create a constant flow of people in the downtown area. Those people, in turn, will buy downtown apartments, eat in downtown restaurants and shop in downtown stores. In fact, plans for the park call for mixed-use buildings, with restaurants, stores and apartments side-by-side with lab buildings.

Maynard said the research park proves that Wake Forest and Winston-Salem can—and should—work together. “People in town really believe,” Maynard said.

Maynard has been involved in the research park project since its beginnings in the early 1990s. The Winston-Salem Chamber of Commerce was looking for a way to revitalize downtown, which had seen several major employers cut jobs or leave town. Chamber officials picked Maynard to chair a downtown redevelopment committee.

“He saw this earlier than anyone else,” said Wake Forest President Thomas K. Hearn Jr. “Doug was the first person to have this vision.”

Even if Maynard were not working on the downtown research park, he'd have plenty to keep him busy. He is co-chairman of the School of Medicine's Centennial Celebration during the 2002-03 academic year. He's also helping develop a biomedical engineering degree program, which will be offered jointly with Virginia Tech University.

Of course, Maynard already has seen plenty of growth at Wake Forest. When he started, the School of Medicine, while respected, was small and mainly regional in scope. Now, the school ranks 39th among the nation's 125 medical schools in both research and primary care, according to U.S. News & World Report. Hearn said the School of Medicine's reputation was built “one department at a time,” adding that Maynard “built an outstandingly good department” in radiology. “We have set our sights higher than anyone expected, but we've fulfilled them,” Maynard said.

When he came as a freshman in 1952, the school still was on the old campus, located east of Raleigh in the town of Wake Forest. Maynard graduated from the School of Medicine in 1959. After three years in the military and one year in private practice in Fayetteville, he returned to the School of Medicine for his radiology residency. He hasn't left since.

He spent 23 years as head of the radiology department before stepping down in 2000. That same year, he served as president of the Radiological Society of North America, a professional organization of more than 30,000 radiologists.

In June 2001, Maynard became interim dean of the School of Medicine for nine months. Last winter, he received the Medallion of Merit, Wake Forest's most prestigious award for distinguished service.

“Everything he does is for the good of the individual as well as the good of the community.”

But Garrison says Maynard's many professional accomplishments don't tell the whole story. His greatest attribute is how he treats other people. “Everything he does is for the good of the individual as well as the good of the community,” Garrison said. “He is the nicest person I know.”

Even though Maynard plans to retire soon, he said he still will be available to help out when needed. That's good news to Dean, who said he plans to take Maynard up on that offer. “If you want something done, getting Doug involved guarantees you the highest likelihood of success.”

Bruce Buchanan ('93) is a writer for the Greensboro (N.C.) News Record.
With more than two dozen contemporary and historical fiction novels to his credit, and more than 3 million copies of his books in print, T. Davis Bunn ('74) is perhaps Wake Forest's most prolific author. A native of Raleigh, N.C., he earned his undergraduate degree in psychology and economics. He planned to attend law school but deferred his enrollment—permanently, as it turned out—to study international finance in London. He later taught at the American College of Switzerland before becoming marketing director for a Swiss company that sold pharmaceuticals and hospital equipment in Africa and the Middle East. From 1979 to 1991, he was managing director of the State of North Carolina's European trade office in Dusseldorf, Germany.

Bunn speaks three languages fluently and has traveled to more than 40 countries in Europe, Africa, Asia and the Middle East conducting research for his books. He has lived in Europe or Africa since 1974. He and his wife, Isabelle, an international business attorney, currently split their time between Oxford, England, where Isabella teaches human rights law, and Florida. He recently visited Wake Forest to conduct research for an as-yet unnamed project.

"Why is it not possible to have a Christian moral included in solid entertainment, and simply marketed as such? ... Too many people in gatekeeping positions within the industry feel 'entertainment' and 'moral' are two mutually exclusive terms. I cannot disagree more.”
DB: The KAs of Wake Forest were the finest group of men I have ever met. And I am absolutely certain that if I were ever to put anything more than that into print, I would be disposed of immediately. So let's move on to some safer topic.

WFM: You attended Wake Forest as preparation for a career in business, not as a writer. But did Wake Forest have any influence on what you are doing today?

DB: As any of my fraternity brothers would tell you, I was far too dense to know where I was headed during my college years. It took three years in Africa to get me pointed in the right direction.

WFM: We've heard that the inspiration for your becoming a novelist came during a harrowing adventure at sea that sounds like a story from one of your novels. Any truth to that?

DB: Unfortunately true. I was surfing in the Basque Country, at a break called Guetharry, on the Atlantic coastline where France meets Spain. This is home to one of the world's largest waves. I had no business being within 50 miles of the place. I got caught inside on a 25-foot set. I still remember the moment vividly. The sun was out, the wind was utterly calm, and I had a four-story wall of water that was about to fall on my head. As another writer once said, it is amazing how terror can focus the mind.

WFM: "Winner Take All" is described as a "crossover" book. Is there some risk in this?

DB: Yes, possibly. But there are other aspects which have to be taken very seriously here. So long as I was published by Christian houses, I was never reviewed. I had 2 million copies of my books sold before my first review ever came out. My books were never placed in the fiction shelves of standard bookstores. They were lumped with everything else marked "inspirational." Why is it not possible to have a Christian moral included in solid entertainment and simply marketed as such? Believe me, you won't want to get me started down that road. So yes, I am working with a New York house, and yes, I am now sold through mainstream channels. Does this mean I am selling out? You decide.

WFM: You have studied world religions extensively, including Islam, Judaism and Buddhism, as well as Christianity. How has this influenced your writing?

DB: Writing, good writing, has to be based upon personal experience. Not knowledge. Experience. Everything I am, everything I've done, goes into this. To say I've studied extensively is perhaps misleading, however. I am not a scholar. My wife is a scholar. I know what one looks like. And I don't fit that title. She's the one with the brains. I'm the one with, well, with the New York publisher. I want to know how people live their connection to the divine and how I can translate this into a story.

WFM: How does one write a good Christian novel that also has appeal to a larger audience without being preachy?

DB: You said it. Please, figure it out and tell me. I need somebody to tell me how. It's a problem I go through in forming every new book. If it actually works, and in this new book, "Winner Take All," I think it does, then it's a miracle. Because I have no idea. I think it's because I was born Baptist. Telling a Baptist to be subtle is like telling a Republican to go hug a tree. No. Maybe I should have been born a New Age Jehovah's Witness. Then I could knock on your door but not have anything to say.

WFM: What are you working on now?

DB: Generally, I have two kinds of stories I work on at this point. There are the easier books, the ones that just spring up and get written. And there are the ones like these with Doubleday that are intended to tax me to the absolute limit.
I love to write. It is my passion and, I feel, my calling. I waited nine long years to get published and another nine years to get reviewed. So if Booklist thinks I’m writing too many books, hey, no problem. I’ll take the only option available. Start another pen name.

WFM: Is there a greater appeal for Christian fiction since 9/11?

DB: Here we go. Those trick questions that threaten to unstop the steam. I can’t tell you about Christian fiction specifically. But fiction with a moral—entertainment that is not violence-driven, or hate-driven, where the evil character is the only character that is well molded—has been seen to increase. How long this will last is anyone’s guess. But it has happened.

All we can say for the moment is that there has been an increase in a trend already in existence. Too many people in gatekeeping positions within the industry feel “entertainment” and “moral” are two mutually exclusive terms. I cannot disagree more. I was in New York City on 9/11. My second crossover, “Drummer,” was released that Thursday. What a day. What a day. Just one of 5 million people in New York who have been branded by that day. It will go into a book. How, I’m not sure. But it will go.

WFM: You’ve delayed your admission to the Wake Forest law school for almost 30 years. Any chance you’ll enroll any time soon?

DB: Too late. My wife has pre-empted that role. And done far more with it than I ever could have, I am happy to say. Maybe you could stop by the admissions office when we’re done and tell them to circular-file my application? I’d appreciate that.

Kerry M. King (’85)
It must have been the spring of 1987, my second year at Wake Forest. I was sitting in Professor Will Sanders’ office listening to the wisdom of time, eyeing the books that stretched across the length of the room and up to the ceiling. It was then—in one of those moments that the Greeks referred to as kairos—that I noticed a curious article about the wise men coming to Bethlehem. The article was written in English, apparently for an international journal, but it referred to something written in German several centuries ago. The author’s name was James C. O’Flaherty, and the subject of the article was a minor work by Johann Georg Hamann. I will never be able to dissociate these names. The one introduced me to the other.

Little did I know at the time that James O’Flaherty was a prominent Hamann scholar, who published the first full translation of one of Hamann’s principal works, “The Socratic Memorabilia.” Little did I know that he single-handedly started the Wake Forest German department years ago. And little did I know that he lived just around the corner on Faculty Drive. He had retired some years ago, I was told, and was now an emeritus professor. But he needed someone to help him put together a bibliography of his personal Hamann library, his Hamanniana, as he happily referred to it; and for some reason, through some obscure providence, I volunteered.

It was a pleasant walk, even if a short one, past the wood behind Luter dorm to Faculty Drive. There was also something of an adventure in it. Not an adventure by today’s standards, perhaps, but still an adventure—something like entering one of C. S. Lewis’ portals. I had to wait a few minutes after ringing the bell, but it made the greeting better. For it’s not every day that one meets a gentleman. And so it was every afternoon that I would go to 2164 Faculty Drive to work—and to visit. Before long, my task was completed. I had indexed the famed collection of Hamanniana, the envy even of European scholars. There were also the occasional thrills of copying letters from Isaiah Berlin, Bertrand Russell, and Werner Heisenberg—people with whom O’Flaherty corresponded. But I scarcely remember that now. What I remember is the man around whom this great world turned.

Perhaps there’s something of fancy in my recollection, and certainly there is admiration. But, after all, it’s not every day that you get to talk to a man of learning who knows the history of ideas and who looks up into the air before he speaks. That was when he theorized, especially about the nature of reason and what he liked to call its “intuitive” and “discursive” modes. In the end, however, it always came back to the subject of unity and language in Hamann, which was the subject of his dissertation at the University of Chicago. By this he meant the unity of subject and object which language at once naturally and miraculously achieves. And so we spoke of abstractions and “mere relations,” of metaphors and “monosyllabic lightning”—a term from Hamann that he often quoted and that signals the wonder of poetic language.

Of course, we didn’t always speak of academic matters. In fact, we more often talked about his theology professors at Chicago and their endless disputations, the rabies theologorum as he liked to call it. Or about his years as a scholar in Heidelberg in the 1930s and academic life in Germany at that time; or about the German scientific community and the extent of its resistance to National Socialism. And yet, it really didn’t matter what we talked about, even if I was always eager to talk about Hamann. The point was to see the man, whom I greatly admired and whom I had grown to love. I was also lucky to have met his wife, Lucy, before she passed away several years ago. I knew that she was an artist from the portraits that hung in the living room, but I had never known the extent of her work.

Then, this past spring during a visit, which would be one of my last, another portal opened, this time onto the porch I had never seen: there, in the afternoon light stood the old Hamanniana, like a monument, surrounded by countless paintings and sketches. The scene now stands sketched in my memory—a metaphor for a man and a world I was privileged to know and will sorely miss. It is an odd thing how entire worlds can pass unnoticed. In the case of this man, however, this man of letters, this passing is especially hard to bear. For anyone who has known James O’Flaherty must know that in July Wake Forest lost one of its greatest scholars and gentlemen—a scholar of the old world, who had a sublime disregard for, almost an innocence of, one could say, academic disputes, and who therefore spoke in the tradition of Longinus, that is, sublimely.

Wake Forest will go on, and Faculty Drive will continue in its shadows. But for me Wake Forest will never be quite the same: there will no longer be an enchanted wood between Luter and the O’Flaherty home; there will no longer be any cherished conversations about Hamann and so much else; and there will be no final word, except to say with Christian hope and expectation—conversatio nostra est in caelo.

A Capital Connection

Wake Forest Magazine issued a call for news from alumni in the Washington, DC, area. Here is what we heard from those with a “Capital Connection.” In the March issue, we’ll publish news from alums living in Texas and the Southwest! Send your news to Cherin C. Poovey, Box 7205, Winston-Salem, NC, 27109, or e-mail poovey@wfu.edu, by Jan. 15, 2003.

Jack Crosswell’s novel, “Murder of a Brother,” is in its second edition. He is busy working on another novel, “Murder on the Square.” He has toured seven states autographing books. A former news reporter and U.S. Treasury agent, Crosswell lives with his wife, Daphne, on a farm in Cripple Creek, VA. A son, Dr. James J. Crosswell Jr. (MD ’80), is a graduate of Wake Forest’s Bowman Gray School of Medicine.

1959

Jerry Holleman is vice president for state government affairs for Johnson and Johnson Corporate in New Brunswick, NJ, and serves on the PHARMA Board in Washington, DC. His e-mail is jhollem@corus.jnj.com. He says his support for Wake Forest is unfailing!

1966

Carolyn Powell Kirby grew up in the Maryland suburbs of DC and returned to the area in 1969, when her husband, Michael, went off to Vietnam. She has had several careers since that time, settling in local government 20 years ago. She is the special taxing district coordinator and grants administrator for the Anne Arundel County government in Annapolis. While she enjoys her work, her real love is community theatre. She has been involved behind the scenes for the last 16 years and serves as treasurer of the Annapolis Summer Garden Theatre. The Annapolis Capital newspaper recognized her as the “Volunteer of the Week” this past June.

After graduation Michael R. Kirby tried law school, spent three years as an Army officer (serving in Vietnam) went to work for the federal government, and got a master’s degree in government from George Washington University. He retired from the IRS in November 2000 with a Commissioner’s Award and soon thereafter began work as a special assistant to the chief financial officer of the District of Columbia. Continuing his attachment to small but excellent colleges, he has adopted the Naval Academy as his local favorite. Mike also tends to two house rabbits, loves Annapolis and Pacific Northwest float planes, and suggests that Wake Forest alums in Seattle and Portland, OR, invite him to visit them.

Candith Krueger Pallandre has lived in Washington, DC, for six years. She teaches English as a Foreign Language at Georgetown University.
She loves working with students from all over the world and has traveled to Korea on a one-year assignment to set up a teacher-training program for Georgetown. She enjoys living in the city, walking to work, being involved in community activities, and taking advantage of the many resources that DC has to offer. She would love to get in touch with other alumni.

Tim Arnold lives in Columbia, MD, and is a contract database administrator at the State Department. One of the groups the office supports, Crisis Management System, is preparing for the “apocalypse” and has been doing so for well over a decade. The group directly supports the Secretary of State, and he writes that when Madeleine Albright was Secretary, she wanted a database to track her wardrobe. “We never did actually do that.” In his spare time he rides his bike in the Maryland countryside and keeps up with two Scottish Terriers.

1973

Bruce Cooper has been president of Capitol Metro Financial Services Inc., since 1998. He has three children and two grandchildren and lives in Silver Spring, MD.

1976

Jill Murray and husband, John Fitzgerald, live in the heart of Old Town Alexandria, VA, where she has a home office as the mid-Atlantic sales rep for The Lane Press, a magazine printing company. Her 20-year sales career has been focused on selling printing and related services to magazine publishers. In spite of the exciting developments with Internet communications, she still believes “Ink on paper rules!”

1977

Since graduation Paul Jansen has been employed by Fairfax County Public Schools, the 12th largest public school system in the United States. Twenty-five years ago, he began as an instructional assistant and, after 11 years as a classroom mathematics instructor, he became director of student activities at James W. Robinson Secondary School, the largest public school in the state with over 4,300 students. “I have been very lucky to be able to follow a dream.” He writes, “I honestly believe that next to a parent, a teacher can be the most influential person in a child's life.” Jansen has done projects for the National Federation of State High School Associations (nfhss.org) and the Virginia High School League (vhsl.org), and he has spoken locally and nationally, published articles, coached Little Leagues teams and worked at his church. His biggest accomplishment is still a work in progress: two daughters, Caitlyn (13), and Regan (8).

1979

Richard Lee “Chet” Walker and Lisa Shull Walker (’80) are very excited to be renewing their relationship with Wake Forest on a personal level: their son entered as a freshman in August. They live in Germantown, MD, their home for the past 14 years. Chet opened his own insurance firm—Walker Insurance Services, in April 2000. Lisa volunteers in the high school where their daughter is a sophomore and is president of the PTSA.

1981

Richard Waugh is co-founder of B2EMarkets Inc., a Rockville, MD-based software company that sells Web-based Enterprise software to Global 1000 corporations to streamline the process for acquiring supplies and services. He formed the company in 1999 after a 17-year career with GE. Richard lives in Takoma Park, MD, with his wife, Laura, and daughter, Shelby. He is an adjunct professor with George Washington University's Executive MBA program, where he has lectured on the topic of e-Business.

1983

Lisa Rote Lewis was named Teacher of the Year at Glenelg High School in Glenelg, MD, for the second time in three years. She was also chosen to be the high school’s commencement speaker this past spring. Last year, she was named one of six outstanding educators by the Howard County Chamber of Commerce. Lewis teaches junior and senior English and journalism and is advisor to both the school newspaper and the literary magazine.

1984

Patricia McDermott Miller moved to Washington, DC, in May 2000 following graduation from Yale University Divinity School with a Masters of Divinity. She completed a Clinical Pastoral Education Unit at Saint Elizabeth’s Psychiatric hospital during the summer of 2000. She has worked for a year and a half at N Street Village as the staff volunteer coordinator. N Street Village is an interfaith ministry that offers services designed to meet the immediate and long-term needs of homeless women and low-income families. N Street Village has available summer internships and year-long placements, and she would welcome any Wake Forest students to apply!
1985

Deryl Davis has received the Religion Newswriters Association's 2002 national award for television reporting on religion. Deryl is a correspondent for the PBS program "Religion Ethics NewsWeekly," based in Washington, DC. He double-majored in English and history and has reported on subjects such as the Sept. 11 tragedies, Muslims in America, and debates on cloning and President Bush's faith-based initiative. His outside interests include acting in local productions, free-lance writing and radio reporting (for NPR affiliates in DC), hiking and biking. His wife, Whitney Warren (MAEd '97), teaches English and rhetoric at Banneker Academic High School, an inner-city DC public school for advanced students. Her outside interests include furniture restoration, biking and hiking.

David Blick is a historic preservation specialist for the U.S. Department of Housing & Urban Development (HUD). He works in HUD’s Environmental Office, reviewing projects all across the country. David and his wife, Patricia, live in Annapolis, MD, where they are busy fixing up their 1924 bungalow. Since 1997, David has served under three mayors as chairman of the Annapolis Historic Preservation Commission. He holds a master's degree in public history from the University of South Carolina.

Jenny Kletzin DiBiase and Tad DiBiase happily completed their 11th year of living in Washington, DC. They have two daughters, Joanna (5) and Sophie (2 1/2). Jenny is a stay-at-home mom and a part-time free-lance editor. Tad was recently promoted to chief of the Third District Homicide/Major Crimes Section for the U.S. Attorney's Office for the District of Columbia. The whole family got together with Rob Duckwall, Kevin Krause, Chris Ingalls and Thomas Hudspeth (all class of 1987) and their families at Smith Mountain Lake, VA, in June.

Tiffany Glass and Jeff Jeter (’81) are the sole W FU-ers at Manugistics, a software company specializing in supply chain management, pricing and revenue optimization, and service parts management solutions. Tiffany participated in several study-abroad programs and went on to two tours as a Peace Corps Volunteer. She served in the Central African Republic from 1989 to 1991 and in the Russian far east from 1994-1996. Today she combines that Peace Corps/public sector experience in small business with a career in the private sector, with a largely global focus.

Scott Rembold has been appointed director of development at the Johns Hopkins University Nitze School of Advanced International Studies. He was director of development for the graduate school of education at George Washington University, from which he earned a master's degree in 2000.

1990

Dave Dresser is a sales manager for Neopost in Washington, DC. He plays in a band with Melanie Privette Caudron (’89) and friends, performing a mix of traditional and modern Irish music and rock ‘n’ roll. Their Web site is www.40Thieves.info. He and his wife, Tracy, had their first baby, Milly Helen, on 4/30/02.

Ray Gurganus is in his fourth year working with Community IT Innovators, a technology consulting company working with social service, advocacy and other non-profit organizations in the DC metro area. He specializes in developing and maintaining Web-based databases to help clients manage their information effectively. Outside of work, he enjoys hiking and walking the DC area, as well as enjoying the nightlife.

Wendy Holmes Nugent and her husband, Jeff, have moved to Charlottesville, VA, after living in Shanghai, China for five years. In China she taught English as a Second Language (ESL) to the children of international business families at Shanghai American School. Jeff taught middle grades science. They loved living in Asia and enjoyed the fabulous travel opportunities to see China, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Vietnam, Singapore, Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, Sri Lanka and New Zealand. In Charlottesville, Wendy teaches ESL with the Charlottesville City Schools. Jeff is in the doctoral program in Instructional Technology at UVA. After living in one of the world's largest cities, they are enjoying life among the Shenandoah Mountains. They got the golden retriever they had been dreaming of for five years and are living out in the country.

Amy Lynne King Furches is pursuing her Ph.D. in national security public policy at George Washington University. She was married 8/24/02 to Lee Thornton Furches.

Mark Hilpert works for the U.S. State Department's Counterterrorism Office and is finishing a master's in International Affairs at George Washington University. He will enter the U.S. Navy's Officer Candidate School following graduation in 2003. Long-lost classmates are welcome to send an e-mail to Mark_Hilpert@hotmail.com.
The script begins in small-town North Carolina, where the two characters attend the same junior high and high school. Then, for the next four years, they're also together—yet really apart—at a college called... Wake Forest. "They spend this one summer on opposite coasts, going to these parties and dinners," says Meroney. "She's at plays, and he's on the beach; he's dreaming she's out there, while she believes finding him is impossible. All the while, they're made for each other." There are twists and turns through Manhattan, the Midwest, LA and, of course, Washington. "It's a sweeping tale, and when they finally connect, the music swells and it's magic. They just know," writes Beauchamp.

After graduating with a degree in communications and politics, Tanya Augustson's first job was in Washington, DC, as a designer/editor for a large government contractor. After a few years in the professional world, Tanya decided to return to academia and pursue a master's degree in mass communications. She won a full scholarship from the prestigious Grady College of Journalism and Mass Communications at the University of Georgia. As a graduate student, she served as teaching assistant, anchor, reporter and producer for UGA's live nightly news show. While living in Georgia, she worked as a nightly reporter for WTOC-TV in Savannah. Before moving back to the DC area, Tanya finished her master's and moved to London in 1999. She initially worked on major corporate communications strategies with an innovative UK marketing and communications company called WhatIf!?. Deciding to stay in London for a while, she moved to IXL-London, an international Web communications company. In the fall of 2000, Tanya returned to the DC area and has been glad to call it home ever since. After a year of working at a large Washington PR/public affairs agency, Tanya landed her "dream job" as associate director of public affairs the National Cattlemen's Beef Association.

Karina Kabrún Donnelly lives in Washington, DC, and works as director of program development for the U.S.-Baltic Foundation (USBF), a private foundation which was created in 1990 to support democratic and free-market reforms in Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Karina develops professional education and training programs in public administration, independent media and NGO development for the Baltic region. In July, Karina traveled to Riga, Latvia, with five U.S. senators, led by Trent Lott, to participate in the Riga NATO summit, a meeting which focused on the NATO aspirant countries (including the three Baltic states). She traveled to Prague in November to participate in the next Summit, at which the Baltics hoped to be extended an historic invitation to join NATO. During her most recent visit to the Nordic-Baltic region, Karina participated in the Helsinki Women's Business Leaders Summit which was hosted by U.S. Ambassador to Finland Bonnie McElveen-Hunter. The meeting paired more than 50 top American women business leaders with business women from Finland, the Baltics and Russia. Karina is assisting in the preparation of the next portion of this summit which will take place in Washington and will include training at Georgetown University and meetings at the White House and Capitol Hill. While she was a student at Wake Forest, Karina received a Spires of Excellence grant to study the changing educational system in Russia after that country's democratic reforms in 1991. Since graduation from Wake, Karina has earned a master's degree from American University in International Development.
Brian W. Powers (MBA) moved to northern Virginia area three years ago. The small startup communications company he worked for was bought by Verizon Communications. Still with Verizon and now a director of customer operations in the “Telecom Corridor,” Brian oversees the technical support for DSL customers who live in apartments. Brian and his wife, Julie, were expecting their second child in October. Madison (2) was anxiously awaiting a new brother or sister. The Powerses love Virginia and rooting for the Redskins, but they will make permanent plans to stay if DC wins a major league baseball franchise.

Susan Stowers Clark and her husband, Chad, live in Falls Church, VA. She was an occupational therapist with the geriatric population but stopped work while expecting their first child (a boy) in December. Chad works as a financial consultant at Merrill Lynch in DC.

After graduating with a theatre degree, Lauren M. Kirby moved back home to Maryland’s capital city of Annapolis. She spent three years with the Starbucks Coffee Company, and though she sometimes misses her coffee-slinging days, she doesn’t miss making decaf-grande-mocha-frappuccinos at all. She spent a year working as a subscriptions representative at the Kennedy Center in America’s capital city, but she soon realized that she must have been temporarily insane to consider commuting from Annapolis to DC every day. She now works for the Annapolis Symphony Orchestra as its marketing and development manager, the fifth iteration of her job title in two-and-a-half years, but since she keeps getting promoted, it’s OK. She remains involved with theatre as time permits and has taken acting classes at the Shakespeare Theatre and The Studio Theatre in DC. She lives with her boyfriend Kristian and their three cats.

Ryan Clancy received a full-tuition scholarship from the National Health Service Corps to enter the Physician Assistant Program at The George Washington University.

Robert Fatzinger (MAL’S ’99) and Kirsten Patchel Fatzinger (’99) recently moved to the DC area upon completing master’s degrees in May. Robert works in supply chain management for IBM. Kirsten teaches in the Literature & Languages Department at Marymount University and in the Speech Communication Department at Prince George’s Community College.

H. Clare Jenkins graduated with a BA in religion, then attended Boston University, receiving a Masters of Theological Studies in 1999. She continued study at Harvard Divinity School and moved to DC in the fall of 2000. She is a legislative assistant for Rep. Brad Carson from the Second District of Oklahoma, handling defense and national security, health care, trade, labor, veterans, and small business committee issues. She researches all legislation pertaining to these issues, meets with lobbyists and constituents, attends briefings and committee hearings with or for the congressman, responds to constituent mail, and writes speeches. Previously, she was executive assistant to the president at the American Association for Higher Education. She lives in Alexandria, VA.

Cameron Elizabeth Powell has been employed with the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) in Langley, VA, as an intelligence officer; after the 9/11 terrorists attacks she served on the Task Force. She received a graduate certificate in political psychology from George Washington University and lives in Arlington, VA.

Kelly Evans is working at the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases in Bethesda, MD, helping to fund grants for research in fields ranging from AIDS to smallpox. She was planning a fall wedding in the DC area.

Zach Everson writes for and administers www.zacheverson.com. The site contains serious and (hopefully) hilarious columns combined with true stories, as well as a workplace dictionary that gives the true meaning behind business-speak. It is updated every weekday. In July he bought a condo five miles outside of DC in Falls Church, VA. The two years prior to that he rented a house in Falls Church with Matt Robida (’97) and Aaron Gibson (’97). The past two springs they co-managed a Little League baseball team.

Carla Gallelli is living in Washington, DC, and working on her MBA at Georgetown University. She will graduate in May 2003.

Kevin Kuntz (MSA ’99) lives in Old Town Alexandria, VA. He recently moved down from Boston with his wife, Norma Kuntz. He left Arthur Andersen in May 2002 after working there for three years and is a senior auditor for Science Applications International Corporation (SAIC). He moved to the DC area with hopes of catching more Wake Forest hoops on TV!

Allison Bean lives in Alexandria, VA, and has been in the DC area since 2000. She is a professional staff member for the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which has oversight management of the federal government. Her legislative concentration focuses on issues affecting civilian personnel and the U.S. Postal Service. The past several months have been dedicated to the debate on personnel issues surrounding the creation of a Department of Homeland Security. Now the real fun begins, however, because she got engaged in May!

Erika Koch (MA) lives in Westminster, MD, which is about an hour away from DC. She is an assistant professor of psychology at McDaniel College (formerly Western Maryland College), a small liberal arts college.

Chris Seek graduated, then found an internship (with the help of the career services office!) with E.J. Krause & Associates. He worked in the Buenos Aires, Sao Paulo and Madrid offices for close to nine months before returning home to the DC area, where he took a job with Momentum Marketing, a promotional marketing firm on Capitol Hill. Last December he decided to strike out on his own to start a business. He packed his bags, bought a Suzuki Sidekick, and drove to Costa Rica. Along the way he made streaming videos for hotels to post on their Web sites or e-mail to potential customers. When he reached Nicaragua he picked up his girlfriend, Christina Marsigli ('97), who was finishing up her two-year service in the Peace Corps. They sold the Suzuki and spent the next three months traveling north through Bolivia, Peru and finally Ecuador and the Galapagos. Now they are back in DC, organizing tours to Costa Rica and pitching the Discovery Channel on a travel show which would follow the format of his drive to Costa Rica. Christina works for the National Organization for Fetal Alcohol Syndrome, and Chris is pursuing an MBA at American University.

Amy Ligler Schoenhard married Paul Schoenhard on 9/10/02 in Potomac, MD. After she graduates from Duke University School of Law in May 2003, Amy and Paul will relocate to Washington, DC, where Amy has accepted a position as an associate with the law firm of Arent Fox Kintner Plotkin & Kahn, PLLC.

David Sonntag and Ginny Bunch ('01) didn't know each other until coming together at NPF to connect Americans with their National Parks. David, manager of corporate marketing, works with corporations to support National Parks through marketing efforts and in-kind giving. As marketing associate for the National Parks Pass, Ginny manages the pass program and works closely with Dave on marketing and promotional projects.

Karen Roberts lives in Alexandria, VA, with three other Wake Forest alums. She works in Washington, DC, as a project assistant for The Children's Partnership, a national children's advocacy organization.

2002

Alicia Lee lives in Washington, DC. She is the legislative correspondent for Rep. John Culberson (R-TX).
Four years and 110,000 miles later, the Steeles have never looked back. Over interstate highways and off-the-beaten-path byways, they have visited all 48 contiguous states, sampling the continuous variety this vast country has to offer—Amish food in Indiana, blueberry kitches in Iowa, crawfish pie in southwestern Louisiana, and a week of lobsters in Maine; the blaze of fall in the Tennessee Appalachians, a lantern tour of the Mammoth Caves in Kentucky, a fiddlers’ championship in Idaho, and Death Valley Days in the California desert; fields of bluebonnets in the Texas Hill Country, a Habitat for Humanity project in New Mexico, sunrises on Cape Cod, and sunsets on Great Lakes beaches. They've encountered the occasional bump in the road–inadvertently dumping septic-tank waste all over their campground site; impaling the trailer on a gas-pump protection post–but always, they roll merrily along, with no end in sight.

This year they published a book, “Steeles on Wheels: A Year on the Road in an RV,” which chronicles their adventures their first year out and provides tips for would-be vagabonds on topics ranging from getting mail with no permanent address (a service forwards their mail, care of general delivery, to a town they know they’ll be at a week in advance) to accessing e-mail and the Web (they’ll borrow a merchant’s phone jack to dial up their ISP). Copies of the book can be purchased through their Web site at www.steelesonwheels.com.

Their annual itinerary is loosely structured around occasional visits with friends, Mark’s parents in Georgia, and Donia’s two children in the Northeast and trips to about a half-dozen bridge tournaments around the country, where Mark can indulge his passion. “The nice thing about visiting friends—for us and them—is that you bring your own guestroom,” said Donia.

Their 322-square-foot trailer is a paragon of efficiency, with all the comforts of home—ingenious storage spaces, stove, refrigerator, shower, TV and VCR, queen-sized bed, and slide-out sections that provide additional living and sleeping space when parked. “We aren’t tourists—we’re nomads,” Mark pointed out. “We lead normal lives.” Indeed, on certain nights of the week they make sure to park at campgrounds with electricity so they can watch their favorite TV shows along with the rest of us.

They live on Donia’s pension of roughly $3,000 a month, which seems pretty economical, given the cost of fuel and nightly campground fees. “One of the best ways to be free is to learn to live on less,” Mark said. “You’ll be free in so many ways.”

If the Steeles have learned three things about human nature in their travels, they are that people are diverse, they are friendly and helpful, and they worry way too much over imagined calamities. “There are people out there who are way different from us,” they wrote in a follow-up e-mail message. “Only in getting away from our back-home crowd of suburban homeowners with big-city professional jobs did we realize how amazingly varied Americans are. The RVing lifestyle is a great social leveler; every day we live side-by-side with every imaginable type of person, from homeless tent-campers to well-heeled retirees. But social status is irrelevant. What matters is how considerate of fellow campers you are, and how interesting your conversation is.”
Pursuing his passions

Jonathan Kirkendall’s vocations combine compassion for the homeless and a love of art.

Like so many Wake Forest undergraduates, Jonathan Kirkendall ('83) spent a semester at Casa Artom in Venice. Little did he know when departing on that trip that it would yield his life’s two vocations.

Sitting in a train station in Milan late one evening, Kirkendall observed the police evicting everyone who didn’t have a ticket. He soon realized it was their way of expelling the homeless. “That impression stayed with me and grew more vivid as time passed,” he says. “I became more compassionate of the homeless, and more drawn to working with them.”

Then, at Casa Artom, he took an art history course. “I realized then how much I loved art,” says Kirkendall, who was majoring in philosophy. “Two years after graduation, I still felt the pull toward it.”

Today, living in Washington, DC, Kirkendall pursues both of his passions as a professional potter and as director of social services at Miriam’s Kitchen, a not-for-profit facility for the homeless located near the Kennedy Center.

Among the many services Miriam’s Kitchen offers its clients that Kirkendall helped start or develop are daily breakfast, a clothing closet, legal assistance, AA meetings, a mailing address and voice mail system, a medical clinic, outreach programs and transitional housing. It has a lending library and offers after-breakfast visual arts and creative writing programs that allow participants to express their feelings and experiences in positive ways.

A licensed psychotherapist, Kirkendall has more than 10 years of experience counseling homeless people, many of whom are mentally ill. In late May, he coordinated preparations for “One Hundred Bowls of Compassion,” a dinner held at the World Bank to raise money for Miriam’s Kitchen. The event, at which guests bid for handcrafted pottery which friends and contacts of Kirkendall from around the world had donated, netted more than $90,000.

Kirkendall’s compassion, cosmopolitanism and commitment to service seem to come naturally, given his background. The son of Baptist missionaries, he grew up in various countries overseas, including Lebanon, Bangladesh and Iran. At Wake Forest, former Associate Dean Patricia Johansson and Chaplain Ed Christman ('50, JD '53) mentored his incipient call to service.

A couple of years after graduation, Kirkendall seized upon an opportunity to apprentice with a professional potter. “From the moment I first sat down at the wheel,” he says, “I was completely hooked.” He found that he had a talent for pottery and he quickly mastered the craft, developing a style that reflected the art and culture of the countries in which he had lived and studied. But, partly out of realization that a potter needs another income, he enrolled at Naropa Institute in Boulder, Colo.—the nation’s only accredited Buddhist-founded university—and completed a master’s degree in counseling psychology in 1994. Kirkendall, who meditates regularly, values his Naropa training. “You come out knowing your own issues,” he says, “so you don’t project them onto the people you work with.”

Kirkendall moved to New York City, establishing a pottery studio and landing jobs working with clients diagnosed with mental illness, addiction and HIV and with women and children burned out of their homes. But he became frustrated working for publicly funded programs and their restrictive guidelines, so in 1996 he moved to Washington and set up a studio. In March 1997 he joined the staff of Miriam’s Kitchen, first as a part-time social worker and later as a full-time case manager. As one of three professional staff members, Kirkendall helps manage a volunteer base of about 500 and a client load of 150 to 200. Admired widely in the nation’s capital, the organization has received the Washington Post’s award of excellence in non-profit management. Although Kirkendall is fulfilled in his work at Miriam’s Kitchen, he finds that it comes at the expense of his art. To afford more time for pottery, he says he might cut his work with the homeless to part time. But whatever the relative balance is between the two passions, both will always be present in his life.
Hooks receives award

Gene Hooks ('50), Wake Forest’s athletics director from 1964 to 1992, received the 2002 Homer Rice Award from the Division IA Athletic Directors’ Association in September. The award is presented annually to an individual who has had a significant impact on intercollegiate athletics.

After retiring from Wake Forest, Hooks became the first executive director of the association, where he helped develop the CHAMPS program (Challenging Athletes’ Minds for Personal Success) for Division 1A schools nationwide. He retired as the association’s executive director in 1997 and then served as director of the CHAMPS program until 2001. An award named in his honor recognizes the top CHAMPS administrator each year.

After graduating from Wake Forest in 1950, Hooks earned a master’s degree from UNC-Chapel Hill and his doctorate from Vanderbilt. He played professional baseball for several years before returning to Wake Forest as baseball coach in 1956. He received the University’s highest honor, the Medalion of Merit, in 1992 and was named to the Wake Forest Sports Hall of Fame in 1993. Wake Forest’s baseball stadium was named in his honor in 1992.

Brotherly love

For Bill Rivell (’77, P ’05), there was never any question about doing the right thing. When the Augusta, GA, physician’s brother, Jim, went into kidney failure, Rivell did not hesitate. He decided to donate a kidney to his brother.

Jim Rivell, who is a physician living in Concord, N.C., began to lose kidney function at the beginning of the year. “Jim had been ill with autoimmune disease for years,” Rivell said. “The disease is similar to lupus. All of us were tested (as potential donors for a transplant), and I was a perfect match, almost as if I were an identical twin.” Of course, the better the match, the higher chance of success. Rivell didn’t hesitate. “To me it would be a shock if someone didn’t do it,” he added. “I take for granted that almost everyone would do something like that.”

On June 20 the two brothers underwent surgery at Wake Forest University Baptist Medical Center. Dr. Dean Assimos harvested the good kidney from Bill, making a 16-inch incision and removing a rib in the process. Dr. Robert Stratta transplanted the kidney into Jim. Jim’s kidney function returned to normal levels within a couple of days after the operation.

“It was almost too easy,” said Bill Rivell, who was in the hospital just three days and back at work after two weeks. Both brothers are doing well now.

Originally from New Jersey, Rivell graduated from Wake Forest, beginning a family trend of attending ACC colleges; his seven siblings have attended Virginia, Duke, North Carolina, Maryland and Clemson. The tradition continues into the next generation, as Rivell’s oldest son, Guillermo, is a sophomore at Wake Forest.

Rivell said that while his siblings are spread out geographically, they remain very close, spending Thanksgiving and Christmas together and a week during the summer at the beach.

Rivell said the surgery has brought him even closer to his brother, who is nine years younger. “We’ve been likely to talk because we are both physicians,” he said. “Now we feel more of a need to see each other.”

Four-star clubs

Four Wake Forest clubs have been especially busy this year and have been named “Four-Star Clubs,” a new designation to recognize outstanding alumni clubs.

The Atlanta club—led by co-presidents Lisa Snodgrass ('95) and Mary Beth Magee ('89) and young alumni president Joe Kaufman ('94)—held numerous athletic and arts events, including trips to see Atlanta Hawks and Atlanta Thrashers games and excursions to the Callanwolde Fine Arts Center, the Baroque Opera at the Center for the Puppetry Arts, and a Twyla Tharp dance production.

The Charlotte club—under the direction of president David Winslow ('94) and young alumni presidents Leah Grace ('00) and Meredith McDonald—raised money for the American Cancer Society at a Relay for Life charity event, held several game-watching parties, and met for a wine tasing event at Reid's Fine Foods.

The Dallas club—led by president Lyn Johnston ('77) and young alumni president Courtenay Strey ('98)—participated in a Habitat for Humanity building project and had numerous game-watching parties, a potluck dinner and a women's tea.

The Winston-Salem club, due to the efforts of president Greg Hunter ('92) and young alumni co-presidents Heather Balfour ('99) and Stephanie Hudson ('00), volunteered at the Ronald McDonald House and at the 2002 Homecoming Festival on the Quad, and met for several mixers and tailgate parties.

For more information on Wake Forest Clubs, contact Mark “Frosty” Aust ('87, MBA '01), director of Wake Forest Clubs, at (336) 758-4278 or by email at austml@wfu.edu, or Allison Hallman ('01), assistant director, at (336) 758-5263 or by email at hallmaa@email.wfu.edu.

Wake Forest presidents—Tribble, Scales and Hearn—during his four terms on the University’s board of trustees, from 1962 to 1983. He was a physician in Elkin, N.C., for more than 40 years and a former president of the medical school's Alumni Association.

Robert R. Bray ('60), Sept. 15, 2002.

Robert S. Carlson, the first dean of the Babcock Graduate School of Management, died on Oct. 6 following a traffic accident in Hsin Hua, Thailand. He was 68.

Carlson was on vacation from his position at Asian University of Science and Technology in Chon Buri, Thailand, where he taught courses in business policy and international finance. He was also helping start an MBA program there.

He was dean of the Babcock School from its founding in 1969 until 1971, but he continued to teach there until 1987. Although he served as dean for only two years, he was credited with establishing the school’s atmosphere of free discussion between faculty and students and its emphasis on international study. He organized trips to Europe so students could study international finance firsthand. His love of travel led him to take visiting professorships at universities in Alaska, Hawaii and Thailand, after leaving Wake Forest.

A native of Chicago, Carlson graduated from Massachusetts Institute of Technology and, after a stint in the Navy, earned his MBA and PhD in business finance from Stanford University. Before coming to Wake Forest, he taught at the graduate business schools at Columbia and Harvard and at schools in Turkey and Norway. He wrote numerous articles and cases and a textbook on international finance. He is survived by two children, three grandchildren and two sisters.
Reaching out

Inspired by personal loss, Omari Simmons (’96) gives hope to others.

Omari Simmons (’96) is the kind of man who would be successful in any endeavor. He's a bright, articulate attorney who graduated from Wake Forest magna cum laude in three and a half years. He racked up honors while on scholarship at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, and he recently completed study abroad as a Thouron fellow at the University of Cambridge. But that's only half the story.

Simmons' life is about more than academic and professional success; it is about overcoming loss and living the University's motto, Pro Humanitate.

Tragically, Simmons' mother and brother both died during the fall of 1995, his senior year at Wake Forest. He not only survived the loss by staying focused and graduating with a scholarship to law school, he celebrated the memory of his mother and brother by starting a non-profit foundation to help underprivileged youth gain admission to the nation's top universities.

Simmons' mother, Cynthia, a career elementary science teacher, died in a highway accident. Then, after a failed kidney transplant, his brother Nathaniel graduated from Pennsylvania State University before dying of heart failure that same year. "My mother and brother were ordinary people doing extraordinary things, and their inspiration gives the Simmons Memorial Foundation its grassroots emphasis," says Simmons. His father, a former Naval officer, is a board member and advisor to the foundation.

His idea for the Simmons Memorial Foundation sprang from his Wake Forest experience. As a sophomore, Simmons became involved in Big Brothers/Big Sisters. When his "little brother" took him to his classroom for show and tell, Simmons spoke to the sixth-graders about working hard and taking advantage of opportunities for college. The teacher asked him to come back and speak to more students.

Simmons was surprised by the number of middle school students whose parents had already told them that they could not go to college because there was no money to pay for it. "I roped in my roommate (DeAndre Drummond ’96) and a few other Wake Forest students," Simmons explains, "and we started a mentoring program called Target at Atkins Middle School."

Simmons knew that a similar program encouraging youth toward college would benefit students from his home community where, he points out, "many students from historically disenfranchised groups and vulnerable backgrounds fail to attend college, are grossly underrepresented at top colleges or have limited success rates at four-year institutions."

Today the Simmons Memorial Foundation provides educational support services to vulnerable youth in rural southern Delaware, the area where Simmons and his brother grew up, and where his mother taught. SMF encourages middle and high school students to look beyond their current situation and to develop academic and non-academic skills for life success. It does this by providing scholarship aid, SAT preparation and college consulting by alumni from a wide range of colleges and universities.

"At SMF we recognize that no one person succeeds alone," says Simmons, who is an international trade associate at Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering, a Washington, DC, law firm. The foundation’s mentoring program serves 50 to 60 students annually in grades eight through 12. Mentors are young professionals, graduate students and SMF alumni. Wake Forest alumni Irvin DeAndre Drummond (96), Kwasi Asare (99), Telli Meadows (98), and Adrian Bryant (99) are currently serving as mentors.

The program extends beyond high school by continuing to advise students as they navigate college. There are currently 32 students in college who have participated in the SMF mentoring program. Two of these students attend Wake Forest. "At one time we were just trying to get kids to college," Simmons explains. "Now that they are in college, I call or e-mail to see if they need help or advice." Two years ago, SMF’s annual college trip included Wake Forest and other North Carolina schools. In 2001, fourteen SMF seniors garnered 47 acceptances from 32 different colleges and universities and over $750,000 in financial assistance.

SMF helps students attain necessary financial aid and scholarships, and provides scholarship aid to deserving students. The foundation is supported by gifts and grants.

When he's not working, Simmons runs, lifts weights, and tries to take his own advice: look for opportunities and stay motivated. "So many things were given to me freely," he says, "that I just try to give to others."

Wake Forest University extends its gratitude to the individuals, businesses, foundations, churches and other organizations that made gifts to the University during the 2001-2002 fiscal year (July 1, 2001—June 30, 2002).

All donors who made a gift of any amount to Reynolda Campus schools or programs are included in this Honor Roll. The School of Medicine section includes only alumni donors to the medical school; for a complete listing of medical school donors, please see the School of Medicine’s Honor Roll of Donors.

Donors who have made extraordinary commitments during their lifetime or during the last year are listed in the Major Benefactors and Major Donor sections in the front of the Honor Roll.

Individuals who have made planned gift commitments to the University are included in the Legacy Society section. Individuals who have made five-year pledges to one of the University Gift Clubs are listed with the appropriate gift club in the front of the Honor Roll. Gift club members are also listed with their class year or in the Parents, Friends or Faculty/Staff sections if they made a gift during the past year.

Alumni of the College, Graduate School, School of Law and Babcock Graduate School of Management are listed by class year with their appropriate school(s), regardless of the designation of their gift. Other individual donors are listed where appropriate in the Parents, Friends or Faculty/Staff sections.

All donors to the Divinity School are listed in the Divinity School section. Major donors to the Deacon Club also are listed in a separate section; for a complete listing of all Deacon Club donors, please see the Deacon Club Annual Report.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of these lists. Please report corrections or omissions to the Office of University Advancement, P.O. Box 7227, Winston-Salem, NC 27109-7227, by e-mail to alumni@wfu.edu, or by contacting the appropriate development officer.

Two classic Wake Forest books...
One low price

“Wake Forest University: A Photographic Tribute”
Regularly priced at $39.95

National Geographic photographer Kenneth Garrett captures the timeless beauty of Wake Forest in this 112-page large format book. Remember the special places and events—from Homecoming to the Love Feast to Commencement—that you hold dear.

“Demon Deacon Hoops”
By Barry Lawing (MA ’84)
Regularly priced at $35

All the great players, coaches and games are featured in this comprehensive look at Wake Forest’s proud basketball heritage from the very first game in 1906 through the NIT Championship in 2000.

Both books are now available as a package for $50 total, including sales tax and shipping.
